

Sister/Father Fantoni - a Catholic nun or priest (your choice)

God, you are fond of saying, only gives us burdens He knows we can bear. And you know this to be true. When He gave you troubles, in your congregation or elsewhere, you knew them to be opportunities in disguise. Opportunities to lead others into His light.

This, too, must be an opportunity. Is this Purgatory? It must be. You do not have such hubris as to think that even a man such as yourself would gain instant admittance into Heaven. And is this not better, in a way, after all? Here, you can help these other lost, wandering souls cleanse themselves of their worldly sins and attain the purity of Heaven. For, as you know, all who accept the light of God are worthy of salvation.

You wouldn't say you're proud of it (pride is a sin, after all), but it gladdens your heart how many you were able to lead into the light of God in your time on Earth. But still, there were always those you could not reach. You live in a land that espouses tolerance, and as a public figure it would be counterproductive to be too divisive, even against those who preach a false path. Thus, you joined an "interfaith theology meetup", mainly for appearances. Most of the members are too far fallen for you to have much hope for their souls (not that you'd ever give up). There's Nishitani, a Buddhist monk who seems to think the desire to help others is just as bad as sinful desires. And then there's Grandier, who you can barely stand. You know that iconoclasm is trendy, but this Church of Satan nonsense, glorifying the evil and the depraved? It's hard to imagine anything more corrupt than that. Still, you put on your polite face and make pleasantries, drink tea, go to events. Is that where you just were? Some sort of theatre. You remember noticing the security cameras, thinking about security guards watching the crowd from the safety of their control center in some mockery of the omniscience of God. And now... you're dead. You aren't really sure what happened, but you know that everything in this world is God's will, and it isn't your place to question it.

Notes

- You have two badge options, one to be a Catholic nun and one to be a priest. Take your pick.
